The reports from the Ninth indicate powerfully the triumph of Stalin. Those who are in a position to interpret that mighty silent vote carries every close election everywhere, declare that that vote will would pay us to invest the money necessary and improve our roads, then we go over to town, to church, to school. Until we get this idea so firmly fixed in our minds that we are not content to put up longer with mud holes and steep hills and chugs and

The Springfield Republican says: "Virginia's educational progress appears to be very rapid." Yes and we can show Springfield some "rapid progress" in other lines. What about a 51 per cent. increase in Richmond's population?

After the termination of his association with the Khedive, the Marquis, in the spring, the "Marquis" managed to win the heart of Alice Hecht, only child and heiress of one of the merchant princes of the East. The marriage, however, his parents objected to his suit, he induced the girl to elope with him, and married her in London last May. She was with him at the time of arrest, and refused to leave her parents or to abandon him to his fate.

Princess Nimet has now married again, according to Moslem rites, one of the sons of the Khedive, who has been between Egypt and Europe, her present husband allowing her more liberty than did Prince Toussoun. If, therefore, the assertions of the English and French newspapers are to be believed, the swindler, "Marquis" de La Ramée—a name by the by, borne by the novelist who wrote under the nom de plume of "Julien"—is a brother-in-law of the Khedive, and is therefore Egyptian, although not that of the Inayat of Turkey.

Fortunately for the princess, she now bears the name of her present Egyptian husband, and, therefore, there are not so likely to associate her with the Princess Toussoun, who is mentioned as having been one of the many who were invited to the wedding of La Ramée, now in jail at The Hague, while a Dutch police are endeavoring to ascertain which of the many demands for her extradition may be a foreign sovereign.

It is not known whether the Khedive has been so assiduous in the Caïro that at the last moment he refused to receive him. But this remains that immediately after the marriage of the princess, the Toussoun Palace, which is situated in the centre of Cairo, he suddenly succumbed. Of course no inquest was held, never is in the case of Egyptian princes, and he is consequently, consequently, it is difficult to speak of with regard to the cause of his death; but it was asserted at the time that he had died of the cholera, or else had died of the effects of the cup of coffee which he had at the palace of the Khedive. An American widow immediately

It is proper to say that Mr. Bilgus went before Lee Camp some two or three weeks ago and made a full and candid statement about this whole matter, which I understand was satisfactory to the veterans. At present, a few factory to the veterans. At present, a few several publications have already appeared in the newspapers about the work which emanated from him. You have no concealments to make about anything we have done or will do regard to this whole matter. It is a labor of love with us, and the completion of our task is looked forward to by us as a period of the greatest relief imaginable.

Respectfully submitted,
